Favourite films

A In It's a Wonderful Life with James Stewart, the scene that gets me is at the end when one guy says: 'To my big brother, George, the richest man in town.' It kills me, man. In the film, it's Christmas and James Stewart is in big trouble financially and he's going to be arrested and so he decides to kill himself. But then this angel comes down (only he looks like an ordinary guy) and shows him what life would have been like in his home town if he'd never lived. And he sees how his life has touched all these other lives and really made a difference. I watch most of the film with a lump in my throat. Brilliant!

Pete

C The opening of Jaws. It's all in the music, which is played on the cello. I expect everyone knows it. You start by seeing the sea from the point of view of a shark on the bottom of the sea bed. Then the scene moves to a beach and it's a sunny day and all these families are sunbathing and having a good time. Then there's a girl who goes into the water, and suddenly we're under the water again, looking at the girl's legs from the shark's point of view. Then suddenly she screams and she's dragged across the surface of the water before she disappears. I was on the edge of my seat. It's much more effective than showing the shark straightaway. And for the rest of the film, every time that music comes back you know something awful is going to happen.

Lisa

B One of the funniest moments, I think, is in the first Indiana Jones movie, Raiders of the Lost Ark, when Harrison Ford is trying to escape from his enemies. It takes place in an eastern market and Indiana is suddenly faced by an enormous man wearing a turban and carrying a huge sword. The man gives an awesome display of swordplay with this sword and you can see this feeling of panic passing over Indiana's face. Then he suddenly pulls out a gun and just shoots the guy. The first time I saw it, the audience broke out in a cheer. Amazing! Apparently, I read later, they were going to do a full fight, but Ford didn't want to spend hours in the scorching sun and it would have been very expensive, so he asked Spielberg (the director) if he could just shoot the guy and Spielberg agreed.

Mel

D Star Wars, every time. Not the later films, but the very first film right at the end when Luke Skywalker joins the rebel attack on the Death Star. The Death Star is this huge artificial 'moon' which is about to destroy the rebels' planet. And the only way to destroy it is for the X-wing pilots to fly down a narrow lane and hit a tiny opening. All of Luke's fellow-pilots are killed or their X-wings are damaged and it's up to him alone. He makes the decision to switch off his computer and use 'the Force' to find his target. 'Great shot, kid!' says Han Solo. 'That was one in a million!'

Steve

E The most I've ever cried in a movie was in Pay it Forward. It's about this kid, Trevor, and on his first day of school he gets this assignment: 'Think of an idea to change the world, and put it into practice.' And he has this idea that the world would change if everyone did good deeds for three other people, and then those three people would help three other people, and so on, and eventually it would spread right round the world. And then he gets killed trying to help a friend. And they ask everyone who has received an act of kindness or help as a result of his idea to light a candle and you see all these thousands of candles. I tell you, no one had a dry eye in the cinema.

Sandy

F Jurassic Park. The bit when the two kids are in the jeep and it's broken down and there's some water in the back and you hear this thumping noise, and all you see is the movement in the water and the fear in their eyes when they understand what it means. I saw it when I was about 11 and I was petrified. That was more frightening than actually seeing the Tyrannosaurus rex.

Hi mate!

Sorry it's taken me so long to get in touch, but things have been a bit crazy since I arrived here in Bali. The new job is great, and I'm really [1]op*timistic* about our future here. Jodie is just starting to settle in now – she was a bit [2]pa_____ at first as we had trouble finding a place to live. We were both getting [3]im_____ as we wanted to arrange somewhere quickly, and it was quite [4]fr_____ having to do it in another language, but we've now found a lovely little place near the beach. The job is going well. My boss is really [5]ch_____ and easy to get on with, and the other people I work with are really [6]so_____ , too – we often go out after work together. I'm working really hard though and am [7]ex_____ most days when I get home. Anyway, let me know when you're coming to visit!

All the best,

Chris
